Why you should attend Kensington Park School

Welcome to Kensington Park School

Kensington Park School, a new 11-18 co-educational school in central London, is a fantastic addition to the central London independent school scene offering something different and exciting to discerning young learners and their parents.

The Sixth Form, located opposite the Natural History Museum in South Kensington, opened in September 2017 while the Lower School (ages 11-16), which is just around the corner from both Queensway and Bayswater tube stops, opened its doors to pupils in September 2018.

The school's outlook on education is modern and dynamic with a 21st century curriculum to meet the needs of the students as they grow and develop, and as they prepare themselves for the fast-paced and ever-changing world.

While there is a traditional range of subjects leading to GCSEs and A-levels, the school also offers Mandarin from year 7, and computer science which is positioned as a fourth science alongside chemistry, biology and physics.

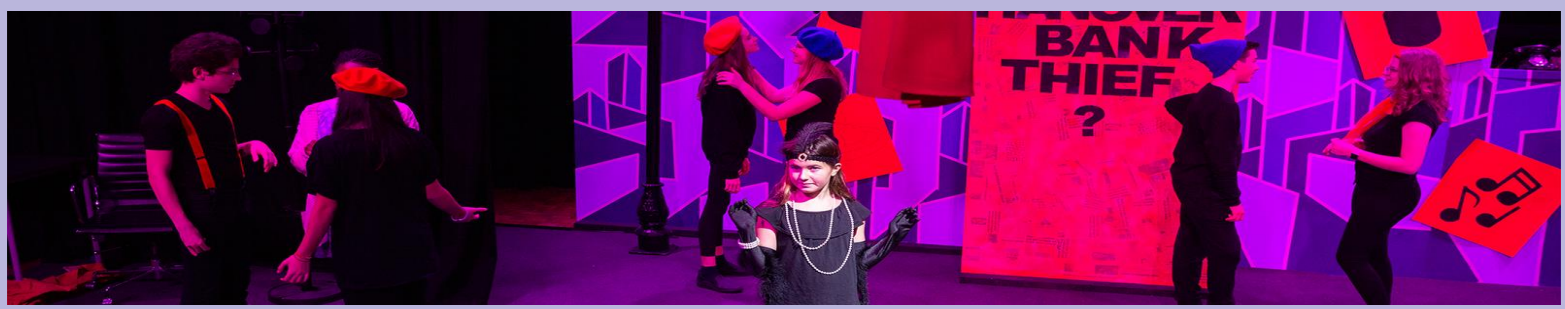
The school also has an innovative and exciting co-curricular provision.

As well as offering high-quality music and drama and a wide range of clubs aimed at sparking enquiring young minds, KPS has entered into partnerships with numerous local sports providers offer the students access to sports ranging from netball, football, swimming and tennis to rowing, rock climbing, horse riding and even ice hockey!



KPS offers an intellectually exciting environment in which pupils can learn and grow, but also have fun. While the staff are rigorous in their approach to teaching and learning, they are thoroughly modern in their outlook and practice. KPS is an academic school but is not a slave to grades. The benchmark of success is whether a pupil has fulfilled his or her potential.
